Osteopathia striata congenita (OSC) is a rare autosomal dominant condition characterised by striations of the skin and bones. It is caused by mutations in a gene encoding the extracellular matrix protein periostin. Mutations in the same gene can cause another condition of osteopathia striata, called gingival pustular psoriasis (GPP). In this report, we describe a patient who had all of the characteristic features of OSC with pustular psoriasis and acantholysis, and whose father had this condition. This is the first report of acantholysis occurring in a patient with OSC with pustular psoriasis. The association of acantholysis with OSC may be a unique feature of a disease caused by alterations in the same gene.Daylight Exposure to Light at Night: Impacts of Urbanization on Rodent Activity. The daily rhythm of the energy system in the retina shifts after dark and during nighttime, with a minimum energy in the green-absorbing cone cells. The advance of night and shortened light period associated with urbanization has been proposed as a possible cause for the increasing incidence of sleep disturbances, mood disorders and diabetes in developed countries. We wanted to assess whether a disturbed timing of the daily activity cycle in rodents exists in the context of urbanization. We recorded the activity of C57BL/6 mice in daily 12 h light/dark cycles (ZT
