With the aging of the population, more elderly patients are injured. This study compared the incidence, associated injuries and functional outcomes of elderly patients with pelvic fractures. Patients aged  $\geq 65$  years with pelvic fractures treated between January 2006 and May 2017 were included. A total of 309 patients were included. T-type fractures were more common in the elderly, whereas A-type fractures were more common in young patients. Functional outcomes were assessed in 79% of elderly patients. The overall mortality rate was 11%. The mortality rate for patients with T-type fractures was significantly higher than for those with A-type fractures. A logistic regression model showed that open pelvic fractures were associated with higher rates of mortality, multiple organ injury and longer hospital stays. In elderly patients with pelvic fractures, mortality rates may be associated with the type of fracture rather than age itself.
